Covered Bridges

Covered bridges symbolize small-town America. Something from the nineteenth century, a little archaic and strange to nineteen-nineties eyes, picturesque and sentimental, "kissing bridges" recall a time when life was simpler and closer to the land - - if only in our dreams.

Carmichaels Bridge

It was built in 1889 and restored by the county in 1987 and spans Muddy Creek.

King Bridge

With a few boards missing here and there on the sides, this rustic bridge is covered with unpainted random-width vertical board siding.

Cox/Lippincott

The Cox / Lippincott Farm Bridge boasts a slightly unusual design. It is covered with white horizontal clapboard siding on both the exterior sides and the portals.

Scott Bridge

Covered with unpainted vertical board on both the sides and portals of the bridge, the Scott Bridge had a roof of sheet metal and a deck of crosswise planking.

Shriver Bridge

The Shriver is another of the queen post structures located in the open countryside of Greene County.

Woods Bridge

Serving as the oldest covered bridge that remains standing in Greene County, this bridge was named for Edward (Ned or Neddie) W. Wood, a Civil War veteran who owned the land on which the bridge was built in 1882.
