Lindsey Gilbert, the 2016 Greene County Fair queen, is no stranger to farm animals or the fair.

The 17-year old first started entering 4-H competitions as a young girl while caring for rabbits and raised everything from goats and sheep to pigs and cattle on her family's 18-acre farm near Spraggs, Pennsylvania.

So she was a natural choice to be crowned the 2016 Greene County Fair queen during the pageant Sunday afternoon at the fairgrounds. Gilbert, a daughter of James and Heather Gilbert, competed with Breanna Scott for the fair queen title.

"I was shocked. It's something I always wanted to do," Gilbert said of winning. "The fair queen (competition) is open to anyone, but I think it's good to have that involvement in 4-H."

Gilbert spent her first official day as fair queen handing out ribbons and posing for photos during the goat competitions Monday morning inside the show ring at the 4-H barn. It was a natural transition to someone who spent years in the show ring with her own animals.

"It's definitely different," she said. "Usually I'm the one showing, but it's nice because I know all of the classes. I'm not showing as much anymore, but I'm still able to go to the (competitions)."

She recently graduated from Waynesburg Central High School and has been taking online classes at California University of Pennsylvania. Gilbert will attend that school full-time this fall to study sociology and hopes to eventually go to law school.

Although Gilbert will show a few of her rabbits during this year's fair, her busy schedule taking online college courses while finishing high school took time she would normally use raising her other farm animals. That's why being named fair queen was so special since she now can participate in many of the events and spend time with the 4-H competitors who became friends over the years.

"It's such a small community, but everyone shows up to help the kids," Gilbert said. "It's crazy how much it's grown over the years."

The annual joint convention of Pennsylvania State Association of County Fairs and Pennsylvania State Showmen's Association was held on Saturday, January 23, 2017 in Hersey, PA

The Pennsylvania State Association of County Fairs (PSACF) exists as a voluntary non-profit educational organization dedicated to promote the growth and improvement of Agriculture Fairs, Associations and Societies within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. They also educate and provide the opportunity to exchange information among members, the general public and agencies for the betterment of the Fairs and/or Fair Industry.

The PSACF has been in existence since 1912 beginning with 13 Fairs (members) and has steadily grown to 109 Fairs (members). The Pennsylvania State Fair Convention held annually during the third week of January is the opportunity for Fairs to participate in networking, seminars, table topics, meetings, trade shows and the State Fair Queen contest.

January 2017 Pennsylvania State Fair Queen Contest:

Lindsay Gilbert (now 18-years old) had the opportunity to compete at the January 2017 PA State Fair Convention in Hershey, PA, along with the 2016 Jacktown Fair Queen Laura Wise and 58 other fellow county and community 2016 fair queens. The winner of the 2016 PA State Fair Queen was Darby Kasper from Roseville, Tioga County, PA.
